FEATURES

24 "I think we concert givers must not always play sure shots": Georges Barrère, Champion of New Music
by Nancy Toff
Flutist Georges Barrère emigrated to the United States one century ago this year, at a time when the center of musical creativity was beginning to shift west from Paris to New York. He was an outspoken advocate of new music, promoting it through established performing organizations, new-music groups, and his own ensembles.

34 Frances Blaisdell: Living Link to Georges Barrère
by Barbara Highton Williams
At a time when professional women flutists were rare and their opportunities even rarer, Frances Blaisdell flourished—as a performer, musician, and student of Georges Barrère.

44 The Brazilian Choro: Historical Perspectives and Performance Practices
by Tadeu Coelho and Julie Koidin
Balanço is to choro as swing is to jazz—in both, mandatory elements to proper performance and enjoyment of the music. Immersion in the sound of choro is imperative to playing it well.

56 Walfrid Kujala, Orchestral "Untangler"
by Joanna Cowan White
Walfrid Kujala's students play in more than 30 major orchestras and countless other ensembles, and teach at 20 universities. His influence on symphonic playing is a result of his passion for music tempered with relentless attention to detail.

68 Convention Perspectives
by Susan Goodfellow
A veteran NFA conventioneer offers accolades and insights on the 33rd annual convention.

70 What We Learned on Our Summer Vacation: Etudes and Equally Excellent Ideas
by Cynthia Stevens
